Mansa Council Cracks Down on Illegal Liquor Trading

Denny Kalyalya says the liberalisation of Zambia's exchange rate market in the 1990s contributed to significant dollarisation within both the financial system and the wider economy.

Speaking during the 4th Banking Symposium organised by Stanbic Bank on Friday, Dr Kalyalya said Zambia's decision to remove exchange controls and maintain an open and market-oriented foreign exchange regime had supported private sector development, cross-border investment and access to international capital.

However, he warned that the high use of foreign currency in domestic transactions risks weakening the Kwacha as legal tender and reducing the effectiveness of monetary policy transmission.

Dr Kalyalya said excessive dollarisation also creates additional micro-financial vulnerabilities, including currency mismatches and balance sheet risks. "It is against this background that the Bank of Zambia Currency Directives (2025) were issued in December 2025, aimed at reinforcing the primacy of the Kwacha in domestic transactions while providing appropriate flexibility for sectors with legitimate foreign currency requirements, including mining, tourism and imports," he said. The BOZ Governor further disclosed that the central bank had cautiously adjusted the Monetary Policy Rate over the past two quarters in response to improving inflation trends.

He noted, however, that prevailing geopolitical tensions and global economic uncertainties continue to pose risks to the inflation outlook and broader financial conditions.

Dr Kalyalya also stressed the importance of capital adequacy rules in strengthening confidence in the banking sector and supporting cross-border financial flows.

"Capital adequacy rules play a critical role in facilitating cross-border financial flows and international investment by enhancing confidence in the resilience, solvency and credibility of banks operating across jurisdictions," he said.

"In an increasingly integrated global financial system, investors, correspondent banks, multinational corporations and foreign regulators require assurance that financial institutions remain sound and well-capitalised."

Meanwhile, Dr Kalyalya warned that deteriorating sovereign creditworthiness, including sovereign rating downgrades, fiscal stress and debt distress, can negatively affect the banking sector and the wider economy.

"A deterioration

in sovereign creditworthiness, whether through sovereign rating downgrades, fiscal stress, or debt distress such as experienced during the COVID-19 period, can transmit directly to the banking system and the broader economy," he said.

He added that the situation highlights the importance of maintaining macroeconomic stability through sound fiscal management, credible monetary policy and effective macroprudential oversight.

Dr Kalyalya said prudent management of sovereign exposure remains critical in preserving the resilience and stability of Zambia's financial sector.

Zambia's Economic Survival Rests on Youth Innovation, But Urgent Funding is Needed Now

Zambia's economic future rests squarely on Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs) and youth-led innovation. Across Lusaka, young entrepreneurs are thriving independently in online trading, retail, and car dealerships. Yet, their remarkable success remains largely unrecognized in national economic discussions. Before debating future empowerment schemes, we must address an urgent, immediate crisis: funding existing, viable youth businesses that are already operational but starving for capital to scale. These young business leaders face a critical tipping point. In a recent interview at Levy Junction Shopping Mall, one local youth entrepreneur emphasized that market survival demands intense focus, determination, and strict legal compliance. However, sheer willpower is no longer enough to sustain them against harsh macroeconomic realities. In sectors like electronics, carpentry, and clothing, Lusaka's youth are taking massive financial risks. They rent expensive commercial spaces, often sharing shops to split exorbitant costs. Despite their resilience, they are hitting a wall due to shared, systemic bottlenecks: high trading space rentals, crushing internet costs, and the challenge of sourcing quality inventory. To rise above these hurdles, their collective strategy has been delivering genuine products to build consumer trust. They have proven their concepts, secured market share, and demonstrated compliance. What they lack is immediate financial runway. Without urgent intervention, targeted funding, and infrastructure relief, these self-made enterprises risk collapsing under the weight of high operational costs. We must act now to capitalize on this momentum. Funding these existing youth innovations is not just an investment in individual businesses; it is an urgent economic necessity to secure Zambia's financial future. Readers, policy makers, and financial institutions must pivot their attention to these frontline drivers of our economy before this window of opportunity closes.

AfDB Approves $20 Million Trade Finance Guarantee for Access Bank Zambia

By Mubanga Mubanga
The Board of Directors of the African Development Bank has approved a US$20 million trade finance transaction guarantee facility for Access Bank Zambia Limited aimed at increasing access to trade finance for small and medium enterprises (SMEs) across Zambia.

In a statement issued on Thursday, AfDB Communication and External Relations Officer Emeka Anuforo said the approval marked the first transaction between the African Development Bank and Access Bank Zambia.

Anuforo said the facility is expected to support up to US$240 million in trade volumes over a five-year period, benefiting Zambian businesses that have long struggled to participate effectively in regional and global trade markets.

"Despite contributing 70 percent of Zambia's GDP and providing 88 percent of employment, small and medium enterprises face a chronic shortage of affordable trade finance. Without confirmed letters of credit, small businesses cannot import essential inputs, from agricultural equipment to fast-moving consumer goods, or unlock working capital tied up in foreign collateral requirements," Anuforo stated.

He added that according to AfDB estimates, Africa's trade finance gap stands at between US$100 billion and US$120 billion annually, with SMEs carrying the heaviest burden.

Meanwhile, AfDB Country Manager for Zambia Raubil

Olaniyi Durowoju said trade finance plays a critical role in enabling businesses to participate in economic growth.

"Trade finance is not just an abstract financial instrument. It is what allows smallholder farmers to import certified seed, or local manufacturers to source components and finished goods," he said.

"By backing Access Bank Zambia with our AAA guarantee, we are giving Zambian businesses a seat at the table in regional and global trade, and that translates directly into jobs, incomes and economic resilience."

According to the statement, the African Development Bank's Transaction Guarantee will provide up to 100 percent risk cover to international confirming banks on trade finance instruments issued by Access Bank Zambia.

The facility is expected to reduce the collateral burden that has historically limited SME participation in trade financing.

Anuforo said the initiative would improve SME access to letters of credit for importing agricultural equipment, manufactured goods, solar panels and other commodities critical to Zambia's productive sectors.

The facility is also expected to support export-oriented businesses seeking to expand into regional markets.

And Iheanyi Nwogu said the partnership between Access Bank and AfDB would help the bank expand support to businesses engaged in cross-border trade while contributing to Zambia's long-term economic growth.

KCM Reopens Chingola B Ore Body, Targets Increased Copper Output

By Mubanga Mubanga
Konkola Copper Mines (KCM) has officially reopened the Chingola B ore body in a move expected to significantly boost copper production at the mining giant.
 Speaking during the first blast event, KCM Open Pit Manager Cross Silwamba described the reopening as a historic achievement and urged employees to prioritize safety as operations resume.
 "We need to work very safely, and we need to ensure that the same way we come to work is the same way we return home to our families. They need us, and safety must always remain our priority," Mr. Silwamba said.
 Acting KCM Chief Executive Officer Praveen Sharma said the reopening of Chingola B marked another important step in KCM's recovery and expansion agenda following the resumption of operations in August 2024.

 Mr. Sharma said KCM remains committed to supporting Zambia's national target of producing 3 million tonnes of copper annually, with Vedanta aiming to contribute 300,000 tonnes toward that goal.
 He explained that the Chingola B ore body, located within the Nchanga mining complex, was previously mined between 1980 and 2003 using mechanized room-and-pillar mining methods.
 During that period, the mine consistently produced about 60,000 tonnes of ore per month

KCM Open Pit Manager Cross Silwamba

at an average copper grade of 2.5 percent.
 Mr. Sharma said KCM identified an opportunity to revive the ore body using safer and more efficient mining methods and partnered with Teincomin to support the project due to the contractor's operational capacity and mining equipment availability in Kitwe.
 He commended KCM employees and the Teincomin team for successfully mobilizing operations at the site.

 "As we celebrate this milestone today, the most important factor is that all operations must be carried out safely. I do not want a single tonne of copper before we manage safety. No copper production before safety. Safety remains our number one job," Mr. Sharma said.
 Meanwhile, Deshnee Naidoo expressed optimism about the future of KCM, stating that the mining company is strategically positioned to become Zambia's largest copper producer for decades due to its vast mineral resources and ongoing expansion projects.

 "I expect to see quality mining, and with that will come greater opportunities for expansion and increased production. The future of KCM mining equals success at Nchanga and success at Konkola, because Konkola is where we have the major expansion project," Ms. Naidoo said.
 She also highlighted operational improvements at the Tailings Leach Plant, including the construction of a new six-kilometre pipeline aimed at improving tailings feed efficiency.

Ms. Naidoo emphasized that achieving Zambia's target of producing 3 million tonnes of copper by 2031 would require collaboration between mining companies, employees and business partners.
 "We have the resources, strong partnerships, and dedicated teams capable of helping Zambia achieve its copper production ambitions. KCM is uniquely positioned to help close the gap and contribute meaningfully towards making Zambia a world-class mining destination," she said.
 Chingola B is expected to produce more than 200,000 tonnes of ore per month, significantly increasing output at the Nchanga mining complex.

Mansa Council Cracks Down on Illegal Liquor Trading

By Alexis Chilumbwe

Mansa Municipal Council has intensified operations against illegal liquor trading and confiscated approximately 70 bottles of illicit beer from five traders operating around Down UB Market in an area commonly known as Isambo Lyamfwa.

The operation, conducted through the Council Police Unit, forms part of the local authority's ongoing efforts to promote public health, maintain order and ensure compliance with laws regulating the sale and distribution of intoxicating liquor within the district.

Among the confiscated items were 48 bottles of the locally brewed illicit beer commonly known as Kachasu, packaged in Mojo bottles, eight bottles of Bull beer and 14 bottles of Mr. Chief beer.

According to the council, the suspects' activities contravened the Liquor Licensing Act No. 2 of 2011, the Public Health Act Cap 295 of the Laws of Zambia and the Local Government (Street Vending and Nuisances Amendment No. 2) Regulations of 2018.

The five suspects have since been detained for selling intoxicating liquor in an undesignated area and for trading in the illicit local brew Kachasu, which authorities say poses serious health risks because of its unsafe and unregulated production processes.

Joel Norman Kashi warned members of the public against engaging in the illegal sale and distribution of illicit beer and other intoxicating substances in undesignated places.

"The Local Authority remains committed to safeguarding the health and welfare of residents through continued enforcement operations and regular inspections across trading places within the district," Kashi said.

He further urged members of the public to cooperate with law enforcement agencies by reporting individuals involved in illegal liquor trading and related unlawful activities.

"I wish to remind offenders that such offences attract penalties including fines, imprisonment and confiscation of the illicit products. The confiscated items shall be disposed of in accordance with Section 355 of Cap 88 of the Laws of Zambia," he said.

Kashi added that the council remains committed to creating a clean, safe and law-abiding trading environment for residents and businesses in the district.

Boeing CEO says company met requirements to increase 737 Max production to 47 jets per month

CEO Kelly Ortberg said Wednesday that the company has met requirements set by the Federal Aviation Administration to increase its production of 737 Max aircraft to 47 jets per month.

The company is currently rolling out aircraft at a rate of 42 per month, Ortberg said at a Bernstein conference.

"We've passed the capstone review for rate 47, so we are now in the process of running the line at the 47-a-month rate," Ortberg said. "It'll probably take us a few months of stabilization there. ... My guess is we continue to go up in rate. It may take a little bit longer, but we're off and rolling now for the 47-a-month rate, and we should be there in the next couple months."

In Boeing's most recent earnings report last month, Ortberg said he expected the company to ramp up the production of its best-selling aircraft to 47 a month this summer. On Wednesday, he said Boeing is "highly confident" that it's ready to meet that rate.

While Boeing has previously seen production as high as 57 aircraft a month, Ortberg said he doesn't believe the company can currently sustain that rate with its safety and quality processes.

"We'd like to get someday to a 63-a-month rate, and so we're looking forward to that," Ortberg said. "The market will support those higher rates."

Still, he acknowledged Boeing has "work to do" to get to a point where the company can further ramp up its production rates of the 737 Max aircraft. As the company looks toward reaching a 52-per-month production rate, Ortberg said that process could take at least six months, if not longer, if the newly approved rate goes into effect in July or August.

Zimbabwe Men Dominate Zambia in Battle of the Zambezi Volleyball Friendlies

(From P8)
Zimbabwe's Flying Eagles appeared comfortable in the first match, while the second fixture produced a thrilling contest filled with intensity and passion that kept fans on the edge of their seats.

Several Zimbabwean players featuring for Zambian clubs stood out during the tournament, including Ndola-based Falcons players Tanaka Hwara and Dean Mukusa, as well as Green Buffaloes players Apronage Ngorima and Panashe Sangonya.

In the women's category, Zambia's dominance was inspired by Bertina Zulu and Alice Nakamba, both from Green Buffaloes, who impressed spectators with their attacking play and defensive organization.

Speaking in a post-match interview, Zulu described the friendlies as an important learning experience for the growth of volleyball in Zambia.

"I loved playing against Zimbabwe because we got more international experience from it and also, if we continue having international friendlies we will be able to make the game more popular in Zambia," she said.

Meanwhile, Zimbabwe international Hwara praised the competitiveness of the games and called for more regional tournaments to strengthen volleyball development in Southern Africa.

"It was great playing against a strong Zambian side and I think we should be having more tournaments even with other countries so that volleyball can grow in the southern region. We learn a lot from each other and it is just awesome to exchange knowledge, experience and make strong bonds with each other," Hwara said.

The Battle of the Zambezi friendlies also provided an opportunity for the Zambia Volleyball Association (ZAVA) to assess its Under-20 national teams ahead of regional competitions later this year.

The footballer setting record straight after 46 years

Roly Gregoire signed for Sunderland on 5 November 1977

"I waited 46 years to break my silence, because I didn't think anyone would listen. I thought I'd take these stories to my maker."

Rumour had it Roly Gregoire had become a bus driver, a milkman or even a DJ. But what really happened to Sunderland's first black player was too painful for him to talk about until now.

His first-team debut for the club on 2 January 1978 should have been the proudest day of his life, but hours after the 19-year-old's assist in a 2-0 win over Hull City, the racist abuse started.

By the time injury cut short his career two years later, he had faced so much racism that he could not bear to watch football for many years. He moved away, changed his name and until now has not felt able to share his story.

"Sometimes I wish I'd never played football, to tell you the truth, because some of the pain, I can still feel it," Gregoire, now 67, tells BBC Look North in an emotional interview.

"Talking to you, I can feel myself welling up at times but I'm trying to contain myself because I want to get this across so the supporters can understand where I'm coming from."

Signed from Fourth Division Halifax Town on Bonfire Night 1977, for a fee of £5,000, Roland Gregoire - a quick, direct and confident striker known to everyone as Roly - had caught the eye with a hat-trick against the Wearsiders' reserves, earlier that season.

Zimbabwe Men Dominate Zambia in Battle of the Zambezi Volleyball Friendlies

By Alexis Chilumbwe

Zimbabwe's Senior Men's National Volleyball Team over the weekend dominated the two-series friendly matches against Zambia, winning 3-1 in the opening game before edging the hosts 3-2 in the second encounter.

The women's fixtures, however, proved more competitive, with Zambia overcoming Zimbabwe 3-1 and 3-2 in two tightly contested matches characterized by hard spikes, solid blocking and high intensity play.

The matches, dubbed the "Battle of the Zambezi," were played at the Olympic Youth Development Centre (OYDC), where Zimbabwe's men displayed composure and tactical discipline that consistently broke through Zambia's defensive blocks.
